WHAT CAN YOUR DNA TELL YOU ABOUT CANNABIS?

Cannabis contains 100s of different cannabinoids (e.g. THC and CBD) and terpenes (e.g. pinene and limonene).

Different strains of cannabis contain different concentrations of cannabinoids and terpenes.

DNA is the code used to create long chains of molecules (amino acids) that then go on to combine into proteins.

The specific code in your DNA impacts the quality, abundance, and even potential absence of certain proteins in your brain and body.

When smoked, eaten, or used as a topical, these chemicals enter your body where they interact with your endocannabinoid system, much like keys fitting into locks.

Proteins are used to create your endocannabinoid system, creating a lock that can only be activated by cannabinoids.

Finding the right key requires knowing what kind of locks your body has. Strain Genie uses your DNA (locks) to help find you the right cannabis products (keys).
